Parenting Coordinators, sometimes known as Custody Special Masters, provide an efficient and cost-effective tool for dispute resolution in cases involving custody and visitation issues.

Topics

- What is a Parenting Coordinator?
- When is it a good idea to use a Parenting Coordinator?
- When do Parenting Coordinators make binding decisions, and when do they make recommendations to the court?
- How is a Parenting Coordinator appointed?
- What are the differences between using a mental health professional and a judge/lawyer as a Parenting Coordinator?
- What other tools exist for resolving contested custody and visitation issues?
