When Marc Antony addressed the Roman crowd following the assassination of Julius Caesar, he concluded: "Mischief, thou art afoot. Take thou, what course thou wilt." The Romans proceeded to riot. This program will examine such "mischief," and explore when freedom of speech shields speakers from responsibility for the violent acts of their listeners – and when it does not.

Topics

- What is the legal foundation of freedom of speech?
- When can speakers be held legally responsible for the violent acts of their listeners?
- How can a victim of speech-related violence overcome the First Amendment defense?
- Where will future threats to freedom of speech arise?
