Effective July 2024, the Workplace Violence Prevention (WVP) Act is California's most comprehensive effort yet to protect employees from workplace violence. The WVP Act requires employers to maintain a written workplace violence prevention plan, regular training, and other recordkeeping requirements. Violence at work has implications for labor and employment lawyers, employers, unions, and employees beyond the Act. This panel of experts will discuss the substance and history of the WVP Act, the implications of workplace violence on the practice of labor law, and the real-life impact.
